Our voice is a threat to the Australian government, a threat to this system of oppression, and this legislation is about silencing us, distancing you from our stories and weakening our voice.

We are strong and resilient, but a part of this resilience depends on our ability to be in touch with each other and our supporters. They are aiming to weaken our resistance, to further their process of othering us for political gain.

This legislation is not about taking care of children, it is about demonising refugees. Jacqui Lambie will support this legislation unless you convince her our phones are a lifeline.

The Australian government have "othered refugees" for the last 20 years. It is convenient for them, it gets them more votes. More than 154,000 people signed a petition to stop this bill, but the government don't pay any attention.

The Australian government were successful in hiding the atrocities in Bomana, and to an extent on Manus Island, and now they are trying to repeat it in Australia. Under your noses, right in front of you they are silencing us, cutting us off from the world.

In Papua New Guinea, phones were taken away before throwing our comrades into the Australian-funded Bomana jail, and no-one knew what happened to those refugees. No-one saw their torture because there was no way to communicate.

The government are also disconnecting you, the public, from the atrocities they are inflicting upon us. We know, as they do, that our phones are not only our window on the world but are our voice to the world. Make no mistake friends, this bill is an attempt to silence us.

The Australian government is attempting to bury us alive, mummifying us within these walls. The architects of this cruel bill and those who passed it in the lower house of government, are disconnecting us from our souls and hearts.
